Aquapark Dalmatia at Solaris Hotel Resort, Croatia

Indoor Water Parks

Indoor Water Parks can help companies beat the elements and escape short seasons, attached to hotels they can boost a property's ADR while attracting more guests.

But indoor water parks are tricky recreational spaces that require expert planning and design to manage specific challenges:

Space & Capacity – Indoor water parks must be designed with the perfect balance between comfort and safety and revenue driven capacity. With compact foot prints our ride path engineering team are experts at winding slides to maximize your space with the most thrills per inch while maintaining sightlines to minimize your lifeguarding costs.

HVAC & Water quality – Your choice of systems and equipment is crucial to your ongoing operating cost and longevity of your indoor park. Temperature control, air replacement, organic contamination and Chlorine corrosion are all factors which can be minimized, and WhiteWater can help recommend the best solutions.

Ride Mix – Selecting rides based on demographic is important to ensure that you are maximizing the entertainment value for the space available, including vertical space! WhiteWater thinks past the boundaries looking both to the roof and to the basement to help you create the best experience for guests as possible.

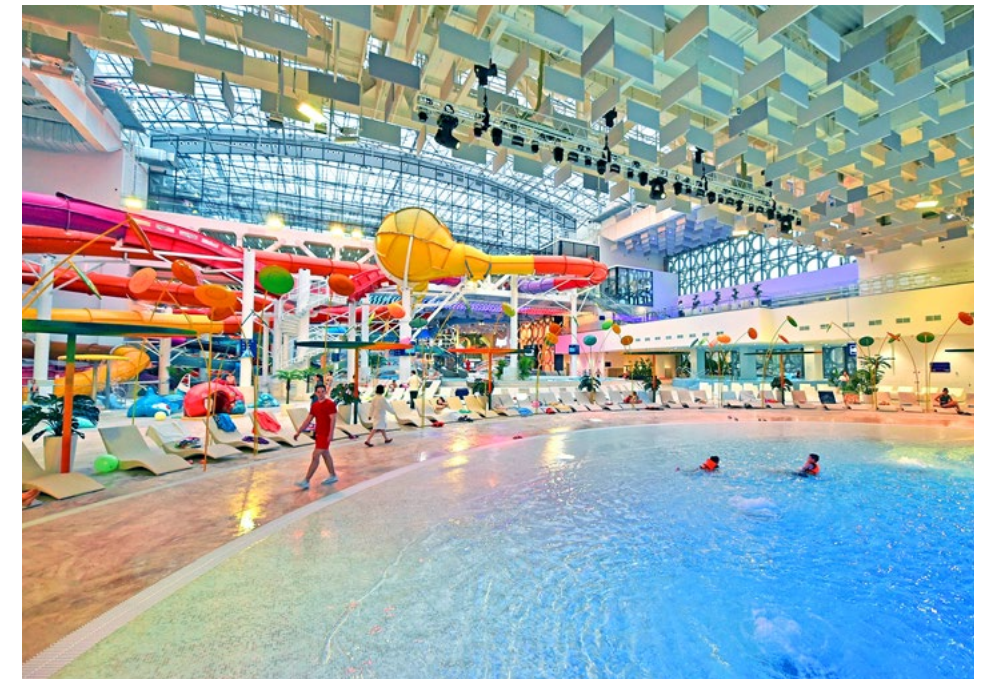

WhiteWater has extensive experience designing, engineering and supplying from 100s of indoor projects around the world that succeed in managing these unique challenges and deliver solid ROI.
